unicef  canada You can provide hope

As the temperatures begin to drop here in Canada, consider adding a child in Pakistan to your holiday giving. The devastating monsoon floods that hit Pakistan earlier this year may not be in the headlines any longer, but the crisis is far from over.

Millions of people continue to face chronic hunger, disease and the bleak prospect of a punishing winter. Many families have returned to their communities only to find their homes in total ruin, with what little they owned completely destroyed. Without ongoing emergency assistance in the form of water, medicines and nutritional supplements, children and families will struggle to survive the winter.

You can provide hope.

Purchasing a UNICEF Child Survival Kit will provide life-saving nutrition and vaccines for a child in need.

Even before the floods hit, chronic poverty and pockets of food insecurity created an extremely vulnerable situation for children in Pakistan – leaving them susceptible to disease and malnutrition. The therapeutic spread, Plumpy'Nut®, is part of an intervention to treat an estimated 75,600 children suffering from acute malnutrition. But without further funding, the ongoing intervention to reach these children is in jeopardy – potentially leading to an increase in mortality for children under five.

You can provide help.

This holiday season, think of the millions of children who have thrived and survived this past year thanks to your contributions, and of those who still desperately need our help.
